Flowers Fall - Shambhala

Flowers Fall is a translation of, and commentary on, Eihei Dogen's (1200-1253) Genjokoan. The Genjokoan was originally written in mid-autumn, the first year of the Tempuku

Era [1233], and given to his lay student Kosho Yo of Kyushu

Island. The text was subsequently revised in the fourth year of the Kencho Era [1252].

It's wholly appropriate, then, that this translation of the commentary by Yasutani Roshi, a major figure in bringing Zen to the West, was one of the first available to English speaking audiences. Yasutani Roshi elucidates Dogen's teaching on the nature of practice, enlightenment, and the buddhaway in his characteristically sharp but grounded style.

It is likely that 'Fall, Leaves, Fall' constitutes one of few existing commentaries on who Emily Brontë was as a person. In her life, friends and family described her as a shy individual, but most of what is known about her come from the posthumous commentaries of her older sister, Charlotte Brontë, whose neutrality cannot, of course, be assured.

Analysis of Fall, Leaves, Fall by Emily Brontë | Poem Analysis
For All flesh is like grass, and all its glory like a flower of the grass. The grass withers, and the flower falls, Contemporary English Version
The Scriptures say, "Humans wither like grass, and their glory fades like wild flowers. Grass dries up, and flowers fall to the ground. Good News Translation
