One of the major causes of party position change is the attempt by party elites to bring a new group into their coalition. This process differs in some important respects from the dynamics of coalition maintenance discussed in Chapter 2. Two well-known instances I explore in this chapter are the cases of abortion and gun control.

America's two party system is highly stable, but its parties' issue positions are not. Democrats and Republicans have changed sides on many subjects, including trade, civil rights, defense spending, and fiscal policy, and polarized on newer issues like abortion and gun control. Yet party position change remains poorly understood.
