the caterpillar started to spin a cocoon. "This is the tricky part," she said. The polliwog watched as the caterpillar spun. Soon only her head was uncovered. "Now I have to close the lid," she said. "And when I come out, I'll be a butterfly." "Go ahead!" the polliwog said excitedly. "I want to see you do it!" "It will take a while," the caterpillar warned.

The caterpillar is bummed that she's not the only creature that will change. And the polliwog assumes that he will change into a butterfly since he is making a change also. A good story to talk about frogs and caterpillars in the spring and how they change. Program worthy I think though more for like a pre-k group rather than elementary school.
