As a consequence the narrative of the Great Transformation is something of a crime with a victim but no perpetrator - except the ideas of the political economists. And his critique of class seems to me to be a bit of an Aunt Sally, though perhaps it was a more relevant argument in the context of Stalinised Marxism in the 1930s when Polanyi's ideas were developing.

Polanyi wrote The Great Transformation before modern econo mists clarified the limitations of self-regulating markets. Today, there is no respectable intellectual support for the proposition that markets, by themselves, lead to efficient, let alone equitable outcomes. When ever information is imperfect or markets are incomplete—that is, es

The Great Transformation is a book by Karl Polanyi, a Hungarian-American political economist. First published in 1944 by Farrar & Rinehart, it deals with the social and political upheavals that took place in England during the rise of the market economy. Polanyi contends that the modern market economy and the modern nation-state should be understood not as discrete elements but as the single human invention he calls the "Market Society". A distinguishing characteristic of the "Market Society" is

"Karl Polanyi's The Great Transformation(1944), published in the same year as Friedrich Hayek's The Road to Serfdom, is as sacred a text to the opponents of free-market capitalism as Hayek's is to the Chicago School. To his devotees, Polanyi showed the free market to be the enemy of humanity in The Great Transformation.

The Great Transformation: The Political and Economic ...
For Polanyi, the essence of the Great Transformation is the framing of economic activity into a profit seeking and hence Capitalistic enterprise. The notion of 'economic profit' as understood in economic liberalism was not prevalent at any other time throughout history, furthermore where the profit motive did exist, profit was constrained by social norms and institutions--This is Polanyi's concept of Embeddedness.

Polanyi's great transformation starts in the 19th century with the installation of a self-regulating market system ('the satanic mill') for labor, land and money and by letting the whole society be run by the system without any intervention. It provoked a wholesale destruction of the 'traditional fabric of society'.
